38/07      BBC Big Screen

The Forum was addressed by Ray Rippingale – Assistant Director, Culture. He explained that the BBC Big Screen was run as a partnership between the BBC, the University of Derby and Derby City Council. It had been installed for several reasons: to provide information such as programming from all BBC digital channels, as a what's on guide, to deliver cultural experiences, as a showcase for local filmmakers and for documentaries produced by local organisations, to enhance festivals and ceremonial occasions and to screen live sport.

Ray advised that it was not difficult to create material suitable for the Big Screen, and that training, guidance and access to equipment were available from the University or from Louise Angel of the BBC. He acknowledged that there was work still to do in developing local content, improving comfort for viewers, providing catering and finding the correct sound levels.

Ray was asked whether the films produced for the Big Screen were broadcast many times or just once. Ray replied that it was preferable that films were shown several times. Nancy Pountain - Derby Access Group - asked about extra seating, and Ray answered that he was working to achieve this even though it ran against part of the Public Realm Strategy that aimed to make public spaces open and uncluttered.

Alison Hicking – Derby Deaf Forum – asked if subtitles could be attached to programming, and Nancy Pountain passed on the suggestion of the Project Group that a subtitle typist be used. Ray advised that all BBC content was subtitled, but that it was difficult and costly to create subtitles if they were not attached. Ray added that any advice would be appreciated.

Ann informed the group that there would be an equality impact assessment of the big Screen soon and several members had already volunteered to help with this. All the equality issues would be highlighted and an action plan put in place to remove the barriers identified, such as sub-titles, seats and so on.

Councillor Turner asked if accessible toilets would be provided on the Market Square, and also if a signer could be inset on broadcasts. George Sanders - CamTAD - also advised that it would be simple to install a Loop System in the Square. Ray agreed to look into all these matters.

39/07      Direct Payments and Home Care Assessments

The Forum received a presentation by Sheila Downey, Senior Assistant Director – Adult Social Services giving an overview of services provided.

Sheila advised that there were four bands used in assessing the risk to loss of independence of service users. Care was provided to service users in all four bands until April 2006, when the local authority agreed to remove support to those in the Low band due to a lack of resources. Sheila advised that two-thirds of local authorities only provided care to service users in the Substantial and Critical bands, whereas Derby City Council also provided care to users in the Moderate band.

Even with the removal of support at the Low band, Sheila reported that there was a £3 million deficit out of a £70 million budget. This was despite the fact that Derby City Council was the second lowest spending Local Authority in its comparator group on Adult Social Care.

Sheila then reported on changes to Direct Payments. Rates had been decreased to £9.00 per hour for service users employing personal assistants directly, and increased to £10.52 per hour for those employing agency staff. The change was made to bring payments in line with market rates. Individual arrangements were brought into place, meaning that if a carer could not work at the new rate the rate would be kept the same for as long as the carer was employed.

To a question asking why the use of Direct Payments was identified as a cost and not a saving factor, Sheila answered that Direct Payments provided people with more hours and additional services and therefore costs increased.

Noel Walsh – Derbyshire Association for the Blind – asked why there were differing ideas within Social Services as to whether assistance was required or not. Sheila replied that it was difficult to judge cases, and that a 'tick-box' method was not used to establish needs. If a case went to appeal, Sheila assured the Forum that it would be treated sensitively.

Marta Hancock – Independent Spokesperson – asked where information about individual arrangements was available as very few knew about it. Sheila replied that this was brought up at Council Cabinet, and that the letter to service users advised them to contact Social Services with any questions. Marta also asked if an Equality Impact Assessment had been made before the rates were changed. Sheila answered that this had not been done as it was not a change in policy.

Two Members stated that the new rates were insufficient to cover all costs, both for directly employed personal assistants and for agency workers. Sheila replied that all costs had been factored in.

The Forum agreed to invite Sheila Downey to a future meeting, as there was insufficient time to answer all the questions of Forum Members.
