What the Modules Offer

All of the following six modules can be done in a group setting or on a one-to-one basis. They are all “free standing” – you don’t have to have done one for another to make sense. However, for members wanting to do several, or all six, there is a logical running order, as shown.

Conducting Topic Reviews – key points of a review – a review timetable – evidence-gathering – selecting witnesses – arranging meetings – preparing for interviews and visits – room layouts – effective interviewing – assessing the evidence – key points – elements in a major report – assembling the draft – good recommendations – outcomes of ‘SMART’ scrutiny activity (90 minutes)

Scrutiny Reviews – how they differ from topic reviews – possible formats - when to do them – what to review – the objectives of a Scrutiny review – outcomes to aim for (30 minutes)

Choosing Subjects to Review - types of activity now and in future – key points of a review – choosing what to review – what SMART means – sources of subjects – deciding what to review – using a rating matrix (45 minutes)

Interviewing Politicians, Senior Officers, Stakeholders and Citizens – why interviewing is key to conducting reviews – room layouts – working with witnesses – the 6 six basic questions – preparing for interviews and visits – effective interviewing – open and closed questions – interview structure and lines of enquiry – asking difficult questions (60 minutes)

Engaging the Public – the experience in Derby 2002-06 – balancing the importance of issues with public interest – new opportunities offered by medium sized scrutiny – sources of local issues – assessing public engagement potential – factors when arranging meetings – mixing people and places – choosing witnesses with differing opinions – room layouts – working with witnesses – effective interviewing of representatives (60 minutes)
